

Test your knowledge: Manage file content in Bash

Your grade: 100%

4/21/26, 10:04 AM

1. What does the command `cat file.txt` do?

☐ The file is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

2. What does the command `cat file.txt > output.txt` do?

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is displayed.

3. What does the command `cat file.txt >> output.txt` do?

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is displayed.

4. What does the command `cat file.txt >> output.txt &` do?

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed.

☐ The file is read and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is written to the terminal and the output is displayed and the output is displayed.

<https://www.coursera.org/learn/linux-and-sql/assignment-submission/4dMfu/test-your-knowledge-manage-file-content-in-bash/view-feedback>

1/1